

NANCY ROSE

PRESENTATION TOPIC

RAISE THE CHILD YOU'VE GOT— NOT THE ONE YOU WANT

Children have a fundamental need to be seen and accepted for who they are—and they thrive when they are! But we live in a competitive and uncertain world where parents understandably strive for the success of their children, and we sometimes put undue pressure and expectations on them. Too often, our efforts to support our children can be misguided. We push them to achieve in as many areas as possible and demonstrate excellence across the board, in order to get into the best schools and obtain the resultant advantages. The great irony is that in an attempt to ensure success, parents can ignore the one thing that will practically guarantee children's lifelong well-being: acceptance of who they are at their core.

This inspiring and practical presentation reveals the new model of parenting called Leading with Acceptance, which gives parents the tools they need to understand and accept who their child is, or CoreSelf. Once parents see and accept the CoreSelf, they are more effectively able to guide their behavior. In this way, parents help their children become the best version of who they are. This is the ultimate success.

Participants will discover:

- Why focusing on compliance sabotages your connection with your child;
- How accepting your child's CoreSelf can put a stop to your battles and lead to a child who naturally wants to please you;
- A step-by-step roadmap to understanding your child's CoreSelf;
- The 4 simple leadership strategies you should use to help your child become the best version of who they are.

This presentation can be tailored for parents, educators, or any adult groups.