Raise the Child You've Got—Not the One You Want: Why Everyone Thrives When Parents Lead with Acceptance
by Nancy Rose

Give Your Child License To Shine!
NEW BOOK TEACHES PARENTS TO LEAD WITH ACCEPTANCE, THE MOST BASIC FOUNDATION OF THE PARENT/CHILD CONNECTION

Acceptance is a fundamental human need that has fallen through the cracks in modern day parenting. While parents should focus on accepting their children for who they are, and allowing them to find the path that is meaningful to them, many struggle with understanding what and what not to accept.

Nancy Rose, the “Acceptance Advocate” and parent coach, identifies a refreshingly new approach to parenting in which every family member comes out a winner. In her new book, Raise the Child You've Got—Not the One You Want: Why Everyone Thrives When Parents Lead with Acceptance, Rose identifies how parenting with acceptance results in raising well-adjusted children and offers strategies to help parents harness acceptance to become a respected leader to their children.

“When acceptance is the starting point in parenting, it builds a warm, solid, connected foundation for a lifetime relationship of mutual respect,” says Rose. “On the other hand, when children are not seen and understood, they begin to tuck away pieces of who they are, leaving them vulnerable to negative influences.”

Raise the Child You've Got—Not the One You Want is a roadmap to building strong parent/child connections. Rose first explores acceptance as a basic human need and walks parents through letting go of the child they “want” in order to start accepting the child they have. Exploring the nine innate traits of the CoreSelf—the aspects of a person that are present at birth and unlikely to change over the course of a person’s lifetime—Rose goes on to identify how to raise children to celebrate the things about themselves that they cannot change, calling this giving children “license to shine.” By breaking down the separation of CoreSelf from behavior, she helps parents distinguish what should and should not be accepted.

“It’s not about unconditional acceptance of what your child does; it’s unconditional acceptance of the things they cannot change about themselves that gives them confidence,” Rose adds. “Behavior, on the other hand, must be guided by parents. By leveraging acceptance of CoreSelf with behavioral guidance, children can become the best versions of who they are.”

In the first parenting book of its kind, Raise the Child You’ve Got—Not the One You Want explores, among other topics:

- Acceptance as a fundamental human need and foundation to the parent/child connection
- How lack of acceptance from parents damages children and harms society as a whole
- The 9 traits that make up a person’s CoreSelf and how acceptance of these qualities enhances the parent/child connection
- Effective ways to couple acceptance with leadership in order to teach proper behavior and respect
- Why EVERYONE thrives when leading with acceptance—from less sibling rivalry to giving back to the community
- How to recognize if you’re too invested in your child’s success
- The manner in which adults who were not accepted as children struggle as parents

A fresh voice and original thinker in the parenting field, Nancy Rose, the “Acceptance Advocate,” speaks and conducts parenting programs throughout the country. She has spent more than 25 years studying the power of acceptance in parent-child relationships, while at home raising her two sons, in the healing process with her own mother, and professionally, as a speaker, author and parent coach. She is a premier member of the Women Speakers Association and a volunteer coach for Girls on the Run, a transformational learning program for young girls. A former tax attorney and CPA, Rose now puts her solid credentials and entrepreneurial spirit to use in service of her passion: making sure every child is given license to shine. She has two grown sons and lives in northern California.
